Common reasons why construction workers fail to receive the benefits under disability pension scheme

Exclusion owing to eligibility condition

Labor must be registered as a construction worker to qualify for the scheme.

Exclusion owing to on-ground implementation

- Handling pensions of various types falls under the jurisdiction of the Revenue Department, posing increased complexities in the process
- Obtaining a disability certificate is challenging for individuals with disabilities who need to visit hospitals

- Upon receiving an acknowledgment, applicants are required to visit a specific designated hospital.

Only individuals with 50% or more disability are eligible for these pensions.

Application process involves applying online.

Women with disabilities are required to submit their applications to the Women and Child Development (WCD) department to obtain the necessary certificate, serving as an additional prerequisite.

According to the Mitr Sanketa's interaction with women in Bangalore, approval is granted to only 3-4 individuals out of 5000 applicants, and the specific reasons for rejection are undisclosed or unshared.

Examples of CSOs going the extra mile to get work done

- CFAR engaged in discussions with the health/disabilities department to propose the organization of camps.
- The initiative aimed to streamline processes by bringing document-signing authorities directly to communities, eliminating the need for disabled individuals to visit hospitals.
- Additionally, CFAR staff regularly participated in monthly UDID grievance meetings with officials from the CSC.
- Despite receiving approval, the printing of cards was a time-consuming step. Through CFAR's advocacy with the department, the necessity for a printed card has been eliminated, and a downloadable version is now deemed sufficient.
- CFAR did an outreach program with India Post Payments Bank (for awareness on opening low-cost bank accounts to avail of the various schemes Aadhaar-linked or other schemes).
